Normalization of arterial stiffness and ventricular afterload following surgical repair of aortic coarctation. The aim of this study was to examine the hemodynamic changes and pathophysiology of aortic root stiffness following surgical repair of aortic coarctation. Aortic root hemodynamics were assessed preoperatively and at 3, 12, 24, and 72 hours and at 10 days postoperatively in 16 patients with isolated aortic coarctation before and after surgical repair. After correction of the coarctation, late systolic blood pressure augmentation was significantly improved at both the aortic sinuses (3, 12, and 24 hours after operation) and the descending aorta (10 days after operation). The normalized vascular resistance at both the aortic sinuses and the descending aorta was significantly greater at 10 days after surgery than in the preoperative period. In addition, the aortic cusps lost their characteristic paradoxical movement. It is concluded that a normalization of the decreased sinus and ventricular afterload occurs after successful correction of aortic coarctation. These results suggest that a reduction in normalization of arterial stiffness, rather than a decrease in arterial stiffening, occurs early after surgical correction of coarctation. We stand for truly helping the water pull you down.
